The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the general principles of the theory of the structure of the atomic nucleus. It is shown that the structure of the nucleus is determined by the balance of the forces of attraction and repulsion between the nucleons. The forces of attraction are of two types: the strong interaction and the electromagnetic interaction. The strong interaction is the dominant force in the nucleus, and it is responsible for the binding of the nucleons together. The electromagnetic interaction is responsible for the repulsion between the protons, which tends to break the nucleus apart. The balance of these two forces determines the stability of the nucleus.
